The Japanese government should implement policies to promote sustainable fashion to address environmental concerns and support the economy. Firstly, the fashion industry is one of the largest contributors to pollution, with excessive waste and resource depletion caused by fast fashion practices. By encouraging sustainable alternatives, such as eco-friendly materials and recycling programs, Japan can reduce its environmental footprint. Secondly, promoting sustainable fashion can stimulate the economy by fostering innovation in the textile industry. Supporting local designers and businesses focused on sustainability can create new job opportunities and position Japan as a global leader in eco-conscious fashion, benefiting both society and the environment.
